Kelly Rowland's
skincare secrets

Kelly Rowland gives beauty tips to Beyonce. The 37-year-old singer - who recently reunited with her Destiny's Child bandmates Beyonce and Michelle Williams at the Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival - has revealed that when she finds a beauty product she loves she can't wait to share it with her famous friends and fellow parents. One product she had to tell Beyonce, 36, and Michelle, 37, about is Resurface serum by Shani Darden which she used to help her skin recover after the birth of her son Titan, three, whom she shares with her husband Tim Weatherspoon. She said: "I always tell them when I buy a new cream. I went and had a facial with Shani Darden - she's the best - she had me try her Resurface serum. It literally changed the whole game, after I had my son, my hormones were all over the place. And it was that that changed my life." Kelly - who has partnered with Schick razors for their new Unstoppable campaign - also revealed she loves to use products from Jessica Alba's Honest Company when she rocks a no makeup look, and she wishes she'd discovered their beauty range sooner. Speaking to PEOPLE, she confessed: "One beauty product that makes me feel beautiful, especially when I don't have anything on, is the Magic Balm from Honest Beauty, it's like my favorite new thing and I discovered it at the end of last year and I have just been like, 'Do you know how amazing this is?' She sent me like 10. Then my makeup artist stole one, my sister stole one."

Taylor Schilling doesn't 'mess' with her body

Taylor Schilling doesn't want to change her body shape to conform with Hollywood's ideal of beauty. The 33-year-old actress 'Orange Is the New Black' star admits actresses are under pressure to look a certain way but she avoids following diet and fitness "trends" because she believes her body shouldn't be "messed with". Rather than punish herself in the gym, Taylor would rather spend her free time reading a good book. Speaking to Glamour.com, she said: "I try to not mess with my body, which often means, at times, not going on any kind of prescribed plan or following any kind of trends - I actively avoid that. I do really firmly believe my body is not an object that should be moulded into a shape or a size. "The truth is that I love it when I can be lying down in bed by 6pm with a book. I read for like 4 hours - I'd love to just read forever." Taylor has also opened up on the #MeToo and Time's Up movements that have swept through Hollywood in the wake of the Harvey Weinstein scandal and is very happy that "uncomfortable" conversations she's been having with her peers are now a public debate. The star - who can be seen in Netflix movie 'The Titan' - explained: "Conversations that have been happening privately between myself and actor friends around questions of representation, what it means to be a woman and the games your need to play, becoming public is just extraordinary. It's incredible, as women, that we are making space for the future girls."

West 'made cappuccinos' when he interned at Fendi

Kanye West once interned at Fendi - but he was just made to make cappuccinos all day. The outspoken rapper and Virgil Abloh, 38, wanted to learn more about the fashion industry before they landed their big breaks as renowned designers and founders of Yeezy and Off-White respectively, but the 'Ultralight Beam' singer has admitted the pair didn't do much when they interned at the Italian fashion house - whose creative director is Karl Lagerfeld - in 2009 but they were just happy to be given access to the building. Speaking to the Charlamagne Tha God on the 'The Breakfast Club's' radio show, the 40-year-old star said: "We interned at Fendi but we ain't do s**t. We ain't get to do nothing. We were just happy to have a key card. "We were doing JPEGs in Japan, we were making photoshop so much and not making clothes, we started joking about the JPEGs... "We couldn't figure out how to actually make the clothes, so we'd just do it in photoshop. And Virgil became the fastest photoshop artist that I have ever met in my life." However, Kanye - who even had the Fendi logo shaved into his head - really enjoyed the idea of walking to work every day and standing by the coffee machines. He said: "Every day, going to work, walking to work, getting cappuccinos."

Rihanna beauty tips
for feeling your best

Rihanna learnt to contour when she "gained weight". The 30-year-old R&B superstar launched her own makeup line Fenty Beauty, which caters for all skin tones, last year and the range became an instant sell-out with her millions of fans snapping up the products. The 'Work' singer confessed to learning how to define and shape her face with her beauty products after she put on a few pounds and her Match Stix Skinsticks in the shade Mocha is her product of choice to use on her "fat days". Appearing in a makeup tutorial for the Vogue YouTube channel, she shared: "It's very important to contour your face for your face, not the way you see on every YouTube tutorial. Because everyone has a different shape. "Contour always starts off looking crazy, but I learnt how to contour when I gained weight believe it or not, that's when it comes in real handy on those fat days, when your cheeks looking like baby cheeks you just gotta [use the make-up to suck in your cheeks]." Rihanna - who is launching her own Fenty Savage lingerie line later this month - swears by the Fenty Beauty Invisible Blotting Powder for when she wants a matte look, and admits she "never leaves without it". She said: "I use this powder to set my contour, to set my makeup and to blot, when you get greasy on the fly honey it's no joke, I always have this I never leave home without it, it's always in my purse, and if it doesn't fit in my purse, I'm changing my purse." And her inspiration behind her newest body product, the Body Lava, came from her own DIY beauty products she created when she spent time in her home country Barbados.

Saudi Radio and Television Corporation launches SBC channel

With the motto of 'Our Future is Here', the Saudi Radio and Television Corporation recently announced launching its new recreational channel, SBC by the beginning of the upcoming holy month of Ramadan. Notably, SBC managed to attract much attention before it was launched thanks to the vast media campaign used to promote it all over Saudi and GCC states' streets as well as on social media networks.

SBC will be the hub for the Arab World's most eloquent productions featuring stars such as Adel Imam, who will make his first debut exclusively on the channel with his Ramadan series "Awalem Khafeya" (Invisible Worlds). It will also present a variety of interesting exclusives local and Arabic programs including family recreation, comedy series, the sport program 'the story of 94' about KSA's national soccer team's trip in USA, comic social programs, religious programs, Manarat documentaries about world mosques, cooking shows, cartoons and drama.

Notably, launching SBC marks a turning point on Saudi media which aspires to become both integrated and attracting to more audiences. SBC promises to reflect audience aspirations and ambitions through showing regionally and internationally competitive content to make a substantial shift that would help realize the slogan it chose of 'Opt to Watch, Will Surely Like'. It is expected to be prime channel for Saudi viewers. The channel's excellence will also go beyond Ramadan to reflect its identity throughout the year and assume its place amongst the leading Arabic channels.
