Vanessa Hudgens fascinated by her style evolution

The 'Spring Breakers' star has sported a number of looks throughout the years and she is always amazed by how her style has changed. She said: "I think the message is that women don't have to be one thing. We're so multifaceted; the more we embrace our duality, the stronger we are ... My style, and the evolution of it, is something that's fascinating to me. Where I was ten years ago is so different from where I am now. It was a very Bohemian time for me. I would always be in maxi dresses with feather earrings and my long hair. I just felt so feminine and flowy. Now, I love an iconic look." And the 30-year-old actress thinks people struggle to tell her age because of her breakout role in 'High School Musical'. She added to Women's Wear Daily: "No one ever gets my age right, I used to want to be older when I was younger. Now that I'm 30, if you tell me I look underage, I actually greatly appreciate it. Most people are acquainted with me via 'High School Musical', so I think in their eyes, I'll be forever 15. "People 100 percent still look at me as Gabriella but it's really sweet that I get to be a part of people's childhood and take them back to a time for them when things were simpler. That's a beautiful thing. I've played so many different kinds of people, I don't think that you can put me into a box." — Bang Showbiz

Miley Cyrus shows off new platinum mullet

The 'Wrecking Ball' hitmaker has transformed her look with the edgy new hairstyle after her mother Tish gave her a trim over the weekend, but the uneven cut meant she turned to celebrity hairstylist Sally Hershberger to tweak the 'do. The pair both shared the updated version of the shoulder length haircut on Instagram, and Sally revealed the "punk vibe" was Miley's own influence. She told InStyle.com: "Miley wanted to go more punk... We went with a modern mullet that she can wear sleek, but also wavy and messy."

Some fans took to social media to voice their disapproval of the new look, with some claiming it wasn't "even". One cruel commenter described it as the "worst haircut I've ever laid my eyes on". Sally issued a defiant response and explained the angle made it look a certain way. She responded on Instagram: "First of all, if you knew anything about hair, it's the position she's in. "That's why it looks that way, it's 100% even, and she also had it straightened, so it's more severe, which I actually like. "That being said chill out and know it's a modern mullet which is very cool, but it's something you probably aren't even well-versed in sorry but not sorry." — Bang Showbiz
