NEW ORLEANS: Monster storm Harvey made landfall again yesterday in Louisiana, evening the balance of its force after having ravaged Texas in recent days. The town of Cameron, near the border, received a blow of 50 inches (1.27 m) of rain, making it the state’s second-highest rainfall record. Harvey has killed dozens and displaced hundreds of thousands, leaving the region in disarray.

While Harvey is technically packing less of a wallop as a tropical storm, heavy rains are still drenching parts of southeastern Texas and neighboring Louisiana, with the Associated Press reporting that the levees in some areas are failing. A levee breach in Cameron Village has already forced 16,000 people to evacuate. Harvey made landfall near Rockport, Texas, with winds of 130 mph. As of press time, the death toll stands at 29.

BEIRUT: Lebanese army soldiers patrol a street in the capital yesterday as unidentified gunmen opened fire on a Lebanese soldier, wounding him. The incident is the latest in a series of attacks on security forces across the country, which has been rocked by a series of bombings in recent months.

During a celebration of their return from battling Islamic State (IS) group militants on the eastern front, youths ride on an armored vehicle next to Lebanese army soldiers in the town of RAS BAALBEK, Lebanon.

The battles ended Sunday with the evacuation deal was negotiated between IS and the anti-IS coalition Brett McGurk said yesterday. “This is in the interest of all parties, including the international community and the people of Syria who have suffered so much.”

“The cease-fire agreement had sparked a furious reaction from protest leaders, who said the deal was too little, too late.”

“President Trump said he would consider a second trip to Texas on Saturday, and President Donald Trump said the day after winning through some violence myself as a Katrina survivor” said Crystal Harris, who works for the Second Harvest Food Bank which was taking donations for storm victims. “I bring back ‘resilience’ she said. “When you see the pictures of Harvey it brings back memories.”
