

Business

Afterpay mega-deal puts spotlight on 'buy now, pay later' platforms

Sector growing rapidly and grabbing attention of regulators

PARIS: The $29-billion takeover of Australia's "buy now, pay later" app Afterpay by US firm Square has thrown a spotlight on a sector that is growing rapidly and grabbing the attention of regulators.

The seven-year-old Sydney-based app—which allows users to pay off smaller purchases in regular instalments—is aimed at millennials who embrace a cashless lifestyle. It now boasts more than 16 million customers worldwide and works with almost 100,000 retailers. Afterpay is the best-known "buy now, pay later"—or BNPL—app, alongside Sweden's Klarna. Its success caught the eye of Square, a digital payment platform owned by Twitter chief Jack Dorsey, who announced the mega deal on Sunday. But other big-name players are also vying for a piece of the cake, including electronic payment service PayPal, online retailer Amazon and banks.

According to a study by Kaleido Intelligence, the valuation of the BNPL sector quadrupled to nearly $80 billion globally between 2018 and 2020 and could rise to as much as $250 billion by 2025. "It's a principle that has been around for quite a long time, but the process of signing up to it has never been so fluid, effective and responsive," said Thomas Rocafull, banking analyst at Sia Partners.

Unlike a credit card, BNPL users are not charged interest or a joining fee and spending limits are kept low. Companies make most of their money by charging retailers for transaction costs. In the case of Afterpay, stores using the app lose around four percent of the value of the transaction, but get the rest of the cash upfront and are not exposed to the risk of non-payment. "For users, it offers a cheaper alternative to credit cards for financing purchases, and is convenient for them during the checkout process," said Nick Maynard, analyst at Juniper Research.

"For a merchant, it is relatively simple to integrate BNPL in their checkouts, and it can allow them to boost their average order value and conversion rate." According to Kaleido Intelligence analyst Steffen Sorrell, retailers offering a BNPL option see the number of visitors to their site finalizing a purchase rise by around 20 percent.

Congested market

Kaleido Intelligence estimates that Americans are the biggest customers for such apps and accounted for around one-third of worldwide BNPL market in 2020. But Asia is also gaining ground rapidly, while the picture in Europe is much more mixed. According to Sia Partners, BNPL payments made up for 23 percent of online retail turnover in Sweden in 2020 and 19 percent in Germany. By contrast, in countries such as Spain and Italy, where consumers still prefer traditional methods of payment, the proportion was only two percent, and in France four percent. Nevertheless, Rocafull said he expected the market in southern Europe to "explode" in the coming years. Jean-Pierre Viboud, head of BNPL specialist Oney Bank, said the market a projected annual growth rate of 30 percent in Europe. However, as the providers of such BNPL services has grown in number, "the market is very congested," said Maynard, predicting a "period of consolidation" in the foreseeable future. Square's purchase of Afterpay is only the latest in a series of recent mergers and acquisitions in the sector. In January, Affirm—set up by PayPal's co-founders—acquired Canada's PayBright. Last year, Klarna bought Italy's Moneymour. In France, banking giant BNP Paribas last week signed an agreement to purchase online consumer credit provider Floa. In May, Banque Postale teamed up with fintech start-up Alma.

Not risk-free

But there are risks, too, with critics arguing that Afterpay and similar apps may tempt people to spend money they do not have.

The success of Afterpay caught the attention of Square, a digital fee platform owned by Twitter chief Jack Dorsey

The BNPL industry is largely unregulated in most countries, and there have been calls for regulators to step in to protect consumers.

"Some consumers are not aware of the consequences of what happens if they default on payments, which is bad for the overall industry," Sorrell said. Users who fail to meet their scheduled payments are hit with substantial late fees. The board of the UK's Financial Conduct Authority said in February that there was a "strong and pressing case to bring buy-now pay-later business into regulation". An FCA-commissioned report said the use of BNPL products had nearly quadrupled in 2020, standing at £2.7 billion ($3.8 billion) with five million users. The review found that while BNPL products give consumers an alternative to more expensive credit, it "also represents a significant potential consumer harm". —AFP

Lebanon central bank chief quizzed over alleged graft: source

BEIRUT: A Lebanese judge yesterday questioned central bank chief Riad Salameh over graft allegations as part of a probe into financial misconduct, a judicial source said. Salameh, one of world's longest-serving central bank governors, is facing a spate of allegations, including in Switzerland and France, over suspicions of money laundering and embezzlement.

Lebanon opened a probe into his wealth in April, after Switzerland requested assistance for an investigation into more than $300 million which Salameh allegedly embezzled out of the central bank with the help of his brother.

Salameh has repeatedly denied the accusations. Yesterday, judge Jean Tannous questioned Salameh as part of Lebanon's own investigation into allegations of "embezzlement of public funds, fraud... money laundering, tax evasion, and illicit enrichment", the source said. The grilling lasted three and a quarter hours, the source said. The judge decided to "keep him under investigation until questioning is completed in further sessions," the source added, without giving a timeframe.

Salameh, who rarely appears before the judiciary, did not have his attorney present yesterday because of a strike organized by the Beirut Bar Association, the source said. In January, he was summoned by Lebanese judges to answer questions submitted by the Swiss attorney general.

Governor of Lebanon's Central Bank Riad Salameh

Critics at home have blamed Salameh's monetary policies for a financial crisis in Lebanon but there have been no serious calls for his removal from a ruling class accused of benefiting from his central bank schemes. After Switzerland opened its probe, France also launched a similar investigation into charges of aggravated money laundering in May. Lebanon is grappling with an economic crisis branded by the World Bank as one of the worst since the mid-19th century. —AFP

Biden to set target of half of US car sales

WASHINGTON: President Joe Biden will set a target that half of all cars sold in the United States by 2030 will be zero-emission vehicles, the White House announced. Biden's plan follows the dramatic loosening of many environmental regulations and climate protections under the Donald Trump administration.

"The President will sign an Executive Order that sets an ambitious new target to make half of all new vehicles sold in 2030 zero-emissions vehicles, including battery electric, plug-in hybrid electric, or fuel cell electric vehicles," a White House statement said.

The order, due to be signed later, will position "America to drive the electric vehicle future forward, outcompete China, and tackle the climate crisis," it added. The three big American auto manufacturers—Ford, General Motors, and Stellantis—expressed their "shared aspiration to achieve sales of 40-50 percent" of electric vehicles including battery electric, fuel cell and plug-in hybrid vehicles by 2030.

In another statement, the manufacturers BMW, Honda, Volkswagen and Volvo—whose electric vehicles are often considered more advanced than their US competitors—applauded the initiative. —AFP